Tim Maguire's sophisticated works are often cinematic in scale and distinctive for their rich coloration. Stand up close and you see how his luminous works are produced with just three pure colours – yellow, magenta and cyan.

The monumental Kinglake Panorama (over seven metres long) is based on a montage of photographs Maguire took when he travelled to Kinglake in the southern part of Australia, a year after devastating bush fires swept through the region.

Inspired by both the evidence of the massive force which had laid the landscape to waste, and the energy of the regrowth, Maguire mirrored this destruction and transformative regeneration in making this sweeping dramatic work.

His initial image was pulled apart into its constituent colours, and then digitally converted into primary colours using a technique developed at Studio Bordas, Paris, where the work on display at Art Basel Hong Kong was created.

Tim Maguire has exhibited extensively in Europe and Australia for more than two decades, including a 2008 solo show at Birmingham's Ikon Gallery, UK. For many years he has worked collaboratively with the French master printer, Franck Bordas.
